FELLOW CITIZENS, PROMPTED BY the ADVICE of many kind FRIENDS, and encouraged by the marks of approbation I have received upon myself, as a man of talents, and a man of a considerate for the Office of Sheriff, at the approaching election.
If a long period of active and laborious exertion in the War of the Revolution, and such other claims as I may have upon your attention, should procure for me a seat in the Legislature, I shall be sure to discharge the duties of the office with zeal and fidelity. With great respect, I have the honor to be your Fellow Citizen, GEORGE REES.

the place where the gold was to be found. The poor peasants, elated at their good fortune, communicated it to a friend in the neighbourhood, and asked his advice. The latter advised as friend to advise the master of the vessel being in the greatest as his informant, who said to him in a whisper, "don't you think there are clever men who can point out the way of discovering the treasure?" "It is most probable," replied the other; "and I have sometimes heard them spoken of. I shall mention the matter to a man who is well known in every thing of the kind. In fact, Basoun spoke to a tavern-keeper named Callaud, formerly an inhabitant of the maisons centrales de Languedoc, and asked his opinion up on the subject, requesting him to mention some person who might point out where the treasure lay concealed. "Why," said Callaud, "you need not apply to any one but myself. I am your man, and can put the treasure into your hands at any moment. I like to be paid on the instant, and I will give you the assistance of Callaud in the discovery of the treasure." The master of the boat, however, refused to accede to the Captain's request, alleging that, as he had paid his passage, he was entitled to free access to any part of the boat, and was determined to exercise his right of entry. "You will!" replied Captain — "then you must take the consequence!" and turned to a western merchant, who at that moment addressed a remark to him. "Why, look ye here, stranger," said a raw-boned Kentuckyman to Captain H., "do you know where you're bound to?" "To Louisville," was the laconic reply.

"— my eyes if you don't go ashore about sixty miles above here, and if you get to Louisville you must trash it up!" This speech had a little effect on the Captain, as he was determined to brazen it out; and accordingly paid his evening visit to the ladies' sanctuary. Basoun returned to his house, and directed him to call on his friends in their search, to which he consented, observing, "I will make the Devil in order to serve you, but it will be necessary to make the Devil (not me) a present of 181 francs, and, besides, a black hen, which had been choked without crying." This demand was a new obstacle in the way of the poor peasants, who had not more than 20 francs; but their friend Basoun, without any hesitation, sold a small meadow, and gave them to Talau and his wife, taking the sum necessary of getting them to sign an undertaking, upon stamped paper, by which they bound themselves in 50,000 francs out of the treasure which was to be found in their field. In how many days took place between the party interested and the sorceror, who promised (after the 1st francs were received) to make the Devil should be whetted to a point. This engagement was entered into, and Callaud repaired to Talau's house, where he selected a room, in which he hung up a sheet, which completely divided the chamber in two parts. The black hen was strangled — it died without crying; the money, deposited in a bag, was placed at a corner of the table, and, opposite to it, the black hen. Callaud went out of the room; he had arrived upon a mile, and brought with him a value which seemed well stocked. After an absence of some minutes, he burst suddenly into the room with his clothes all torn, his hair out of order, his shirt was opened at the bosom, and exposed his breast apparently covered with wounds. "The Devil has beaten me," he exclaimed, "because I have forgotten the key of the value, in which is contained to cut the compact." The imagination of the poor peasants was worked upon by this sanguine preliminary; they showed the greatest eagerness to remedy the neglect, and the chain is at last broken with haemorrhage, etc. The black book appeared to the great consternation of the bystanders, and even Callaud seemed terrified. Talau, his wife, and Basoun got behind the white sheet. Callaud stepped up on a chair, resting one foot upon the table, muttered some words, — he seemed to say "Devil! Devil!" He then exclaimed "Come, come, you know what you have promised me in the tale of Olearon!" At that instant a huge animal rushed into the room, the spectators are almost overcome with horror. "Devil! Devil!" repeated the sorceror, "Do you know where the treasure is hidden?" "Yes," replied a terrified voice. "Of what value is it?" "It is worth 300,000 francs." "What do you ask for finding it?" "The daughter of Talau," replied the same unctuous voice. At these words the mother assumed sufficient strength to say, "What?" The Devil made an attempt to get near him, but at that instant the Devil seized the bag with the money, and the black hen, and vanished, making a hideous noise at his exit. "You see," observed Callaud, "you were not willing to give him your daughter, and therefore you can't have the treasure." Talau and Basoun fell into a state of stupor, and did not recover for some time; the latter was obliged to keep an bed for three weeks. Talau's wife was afraid to go out with her daughter, who was only six years old. She fastened the door every day for three months, before sun set, and took care not to let the child (demanded by the Devil) out of her sight.

As soon as Basoun recovered, he again called upon Callaud, and told him he was ready to give 181 francs more, if he would make the Devil appear for the second time. Callaud, however, firmly refused to show the diamonds of Talau to be given up. "Well," said Callaud, "we will go to Angoulême and get a girl of the town, whom the Devil may carry off, if he pleases." This second invocation did not take place; and the dopes, having consulted some of their friends, were induced to think that the Devil they saw was not the Devil himself, and that Callaud might be a sorcerer. The sorceror was accordingly apprehended. In his examination he pretended to believe in the Devil and his works, and declared that he was only a tool in the hands of a M. Jean Pierre, who was a sorcerer par excellence, but he failed in playing the part of a supine and credulous agent, for, having been asked who performed the part of the beast, or Devil, he replied that it was Jean Pierre. The latter was also apprehended, but there was no proof of his guilt, and he was a quitted. Callaud was sentenced to be imprisoned for five years.

We have read Captain Hail's travails in North America, and admire the accuracy with which he presents to the reader every thing which occurred, or possibly could have occurred, on his tour, within the range of possibility, even to the most trifling and immaterial circumstance. The customs, manners, and predilections of the people, are all subjects with which the Captain deals pretty freely; he appears as a conspicuous personage throughout the work, and seems determined not to omit any incident which could augment his own consequence or detract from our national character. We give to our readers the following statement of facts, which the Captain has not thought proper to favour us with in his book; — from what motive we leave them to judge, as they have been transmitted to us from a respectable individual, who was an eye-witness to the transaction.

In the second volume of his work, page 294, it appears that, on the 25th April, 1828, at 6 o'clock in the evening, the Captain, in company with his son, child and servant, embarked on board of the steam boat Philadelphia, to proceed on the voyage up the grand Mississippi to Louisville, a distance of 1430 miles. The upper deck passengers are transported for ten dollars, and those who assist in carrying wood pay a lower rate, two dollars being deducted for their services. The Captain, however, takes good care to tell us that, by an arrangement made with the Captain of the steam boat, he procured the two state rooms adjoining the great cabin for 125 dollars; giving his readers to understand that his party, from the superior accommodations, ranked among the most respectable of the passengers. The ladies' cabin, on board of the boat, is considered a kind of sacrum sanctum; the gentlemen being precluded by good breeding, as well as the regulations, which are exposed in legible characters, from intruding their presence uncalled for. The Captain, fancying himself an exception to the rule; or presuming upon what he conceived to be an absence of refinement on the part of our backwoodsmen, as he terms them, made his appearance at all times the most unseasonable to attend on Mrs. H., or ascertain whether he could render her any assistance. Nothing was said upon the subject until the third day, when the ladies returned to the Captain of the boat that the King's man's presence might be dispensed with — the other; "and I have sometimes heard them spoken of. I shall mention the matter to a man who is well known in every thing of the kind. In fact, Basoun spoke to a tavern-keeper named Callaud, formerly an inhabitant of the maisons centrales de Languedoc, and asked his opinion up on the subject, requesting him to mention some person who might point out where the treasure lay concealed. "Why," said Callaud, "you need not apply to any one but myself. I am your man, and can put the treasure into your hands at any moment. I like to be paid on the instant, and I will give you the assistance of Callaud in the discovery of the treasure." The master of the boat, however, refused to accede to the Captain's request, alleging that, as he had paid his passage, he was entitled to avoid difficulty or disturbance on board of his boat, but has regulations must be implicitly obeyed; and he alluded to the circumstances, and hoped that there would not be a recurrence. Our valiant Captain, however, refused to accede to the Captain's request, alleging that, as he had paid his passage, he was entitled to free access to any part of the boat, and was determined to exercise his right of entry. "You will!" replied Captain — "then you must take the consequence!" and turned to a western merchant, who at that moment addressed a remark to him. "Why, look ye here, stranger," said a raw-boned Kentuckyman to Captain H., "do you know where you're bound to?" "To Louisville," was the laconic reply.

"— my eyes if you don't go ashore about sixty miles above here, and if you get to Louisville you must trash it up!" This speech had a little effect on the Captain, as he was determined to brazen it out; and accordingly paid his evening visit to the ladies' sanctuary.

The ship AMETHYST has arrived at Boston from Liverpool, bringing London dates to the 19th of August, one week later than had previously been received. We copy the extract supplied by the BOSTON paper. The principal subjects are the uninterrupted progress of the Russians, and the apparent determination of the belligerents to continue a rigorous contest. — The approach of the plague to the vicinity of ODESSA — favourable accounts of the harvest and the revenue in ENGLAND — and the dissatisfaction of the FRENCH liberals with the intentions of the new Ministry.

An extract, from the office of our attentive correspondents of the BOSTON PATRIOT, contains the subjoined article from the MORNING HERALD, of the 19th: — "It is said, though we know not upon what authority, that the Turks have manifested a decided inclination to open negotiations with Russia on the subject of peace. This report obtained some credit in the City among persons generally well informed, and it is customary for belligerents and making preparations for locking themselves up in their houses till the destroying scourge should have passed. Odessa is the grand depot whence all the magazines of the army were supplied, and if it be reduced to a desert for the space of a few months only, the legions now beyond the Balkan may be stopped for want of provisions in their victorious march, or delivered up helpless by famine into the hands of their enemies.

The accounts from Odessa respecting the plague are of the 27th of July.

Letters from Odessa, dated to the 28th ult. contain alarming rumours respecting the place. Round one of the villages a corden sanitaire is established, and no person is allowed, under any pretence, either to enter or to leave the place. An extraordinary Cabinet council, it is said, who left Constantinople the 17th, with the news that the Porte has rejected every proposition respecting Greece, as well as with regard to an arrangement with Russia. The greatest preparations for the continuance of the war are making throughout the Ottoman Empire.

Letters from Berlin mention a fresh levy of men in Russia, of four men in every five hundred of the male population. The promulgation of the Ukase has been delayed only till the Emperor should receive certain accounts of thelessness of all steps to prevail on the Porte to accede to his proposals of peace.

The HAMBURG papers received in London state as a tolerably likely rumour, that the Pacha of Egypt is preparing another great naval expedition, for the purpose, as is supposed, of capturing Tripoli and the Sultan's Port, while, it is added, the Russian squadron, under Admiral Heydon, is assembling at Porsos, and will immediately take such a course as to be able closely to watch the movements of the Egyptian expedition, and, in case of need to attack it." The same paper announces the arrival of the Persian Prince Choros at Moscow, on the 26th July, where he was received with almost regal honors.

Letters from Warsaw of the 12th July, say that the Polish Diet is to open in the month of October, and that the Emperor will come from St. Petersburg to open it in person; that some other Sovereigns will be there at the same time, and that there will be a Congress. Great efforts are making in the interior of the Russian empire. Very considerable reinforcements are sent to the army. General Witt is gone to the military colonies to exercise the troops which are fit for service. They amount to 60,000 men.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 27. — An extraordinary supplement to the Tatler Gazzette of the 19th of July, contains the following report: —

"On the 26th of June, the corps of the Caucasus passed the steep and wooded summits of the Sagartian Mountains, where the enemy hoped to detain us, but were prostrated by a skilful manoeuvre. While our left wing made a feigned attack on the Tatik side, the corps effected its passage on the right side, by another road, and took a position in sight of the Haghi Bank. On the 20th, 1,600 Turks approached, and took possession of some intrenchments, from which they were driven by Major General Baron Fredericks, with the loss of one hundred prisoners, and one standard. The commander-in-chief, seeing it impossible to attack the enemy with advantage, the positions they had taken on the bank of his camp, resolved completely to turn it. On the 30th of June, he marched with all his baggage, and the next day fell in with the enemy, who prepared to attack him. It was the Seraskier himself, who, as we afterwards learned, had come to support Haghi Pacha, whose troops occupied the entrenched camp.

The commander-in-chief, having by a skilful manoeuvre rendered it impossible for Haghi to support the Seraskier, attacked the latter and defeated him; we pursued him for 30 versts, and repulsed him beyond the Sagartian mountains. — On the 2d July, after a march of 15 versts over the ridge of the mountains, General Paskewitch struck the camp of Haghi Pacha in the rear. All the communications with the Seraskier were cut off; his army was totally defeated, driven 30 versts from his camp and himself taken prisoner. In these two actions, the first of which was near the village of Kamish, and the second near a place called Mildzor, the two Turkish corps, the one of 30,000 and the other 20,000 men, were entirely defeated in the space of 24 hours; all the artillery, consisting of 81 pieces of cannon, one of which was fortified, nearly 18,000 pieces, and 19 standards were taken. Pacha Haghi fell into the hands of our victorious troops. — The only drawback on the part of the Turks was the loss of 1,000 men, their ammunition and provisions, 3 camps, one of which was fortified, nearly 18,000 pieces, and 19 standards were taken. Pacha Haghi fell into the hands of our victorious troops. — The only drawback on the part of the Turks was the loss of 1,000 men, their ammunition and
